LA OMISIÓN

a film by Sebastián Schjaer

SYNOPSIS

In a snowy and industrial city in the south of Argentina, Paula, a 23-year-old girl from Buenos Aires, starts an intense job hunt with the sole purpose of saving money. The lack of a job, a home and a stable emotional environment will end up turning that search into a personal and introspective journey. She will have to deal with the hard living conditions in the south as well as with the unsolved aspects of her life, which will gradually be revealed. She knows she is shouting, but she can't hear herself.

NOTES FROM DIRECTOR

THE TITLE

From the beginning, I was interested in focusing on the emotions and feelings of the characters. I felt that the only way to get closer to those emotions was through the most indirect possible way: evoking, suggesting the drama rather than getting directly into it. I was interested in talking about Paula's pain, the impossibility to gain access to it and, above all, the difficulty of understanding it psychologically. In "The Omission" there is no truth to get, no centre to reach. The film revolves around itself in the same confused and lost way as Paula does.

THE SOUTH

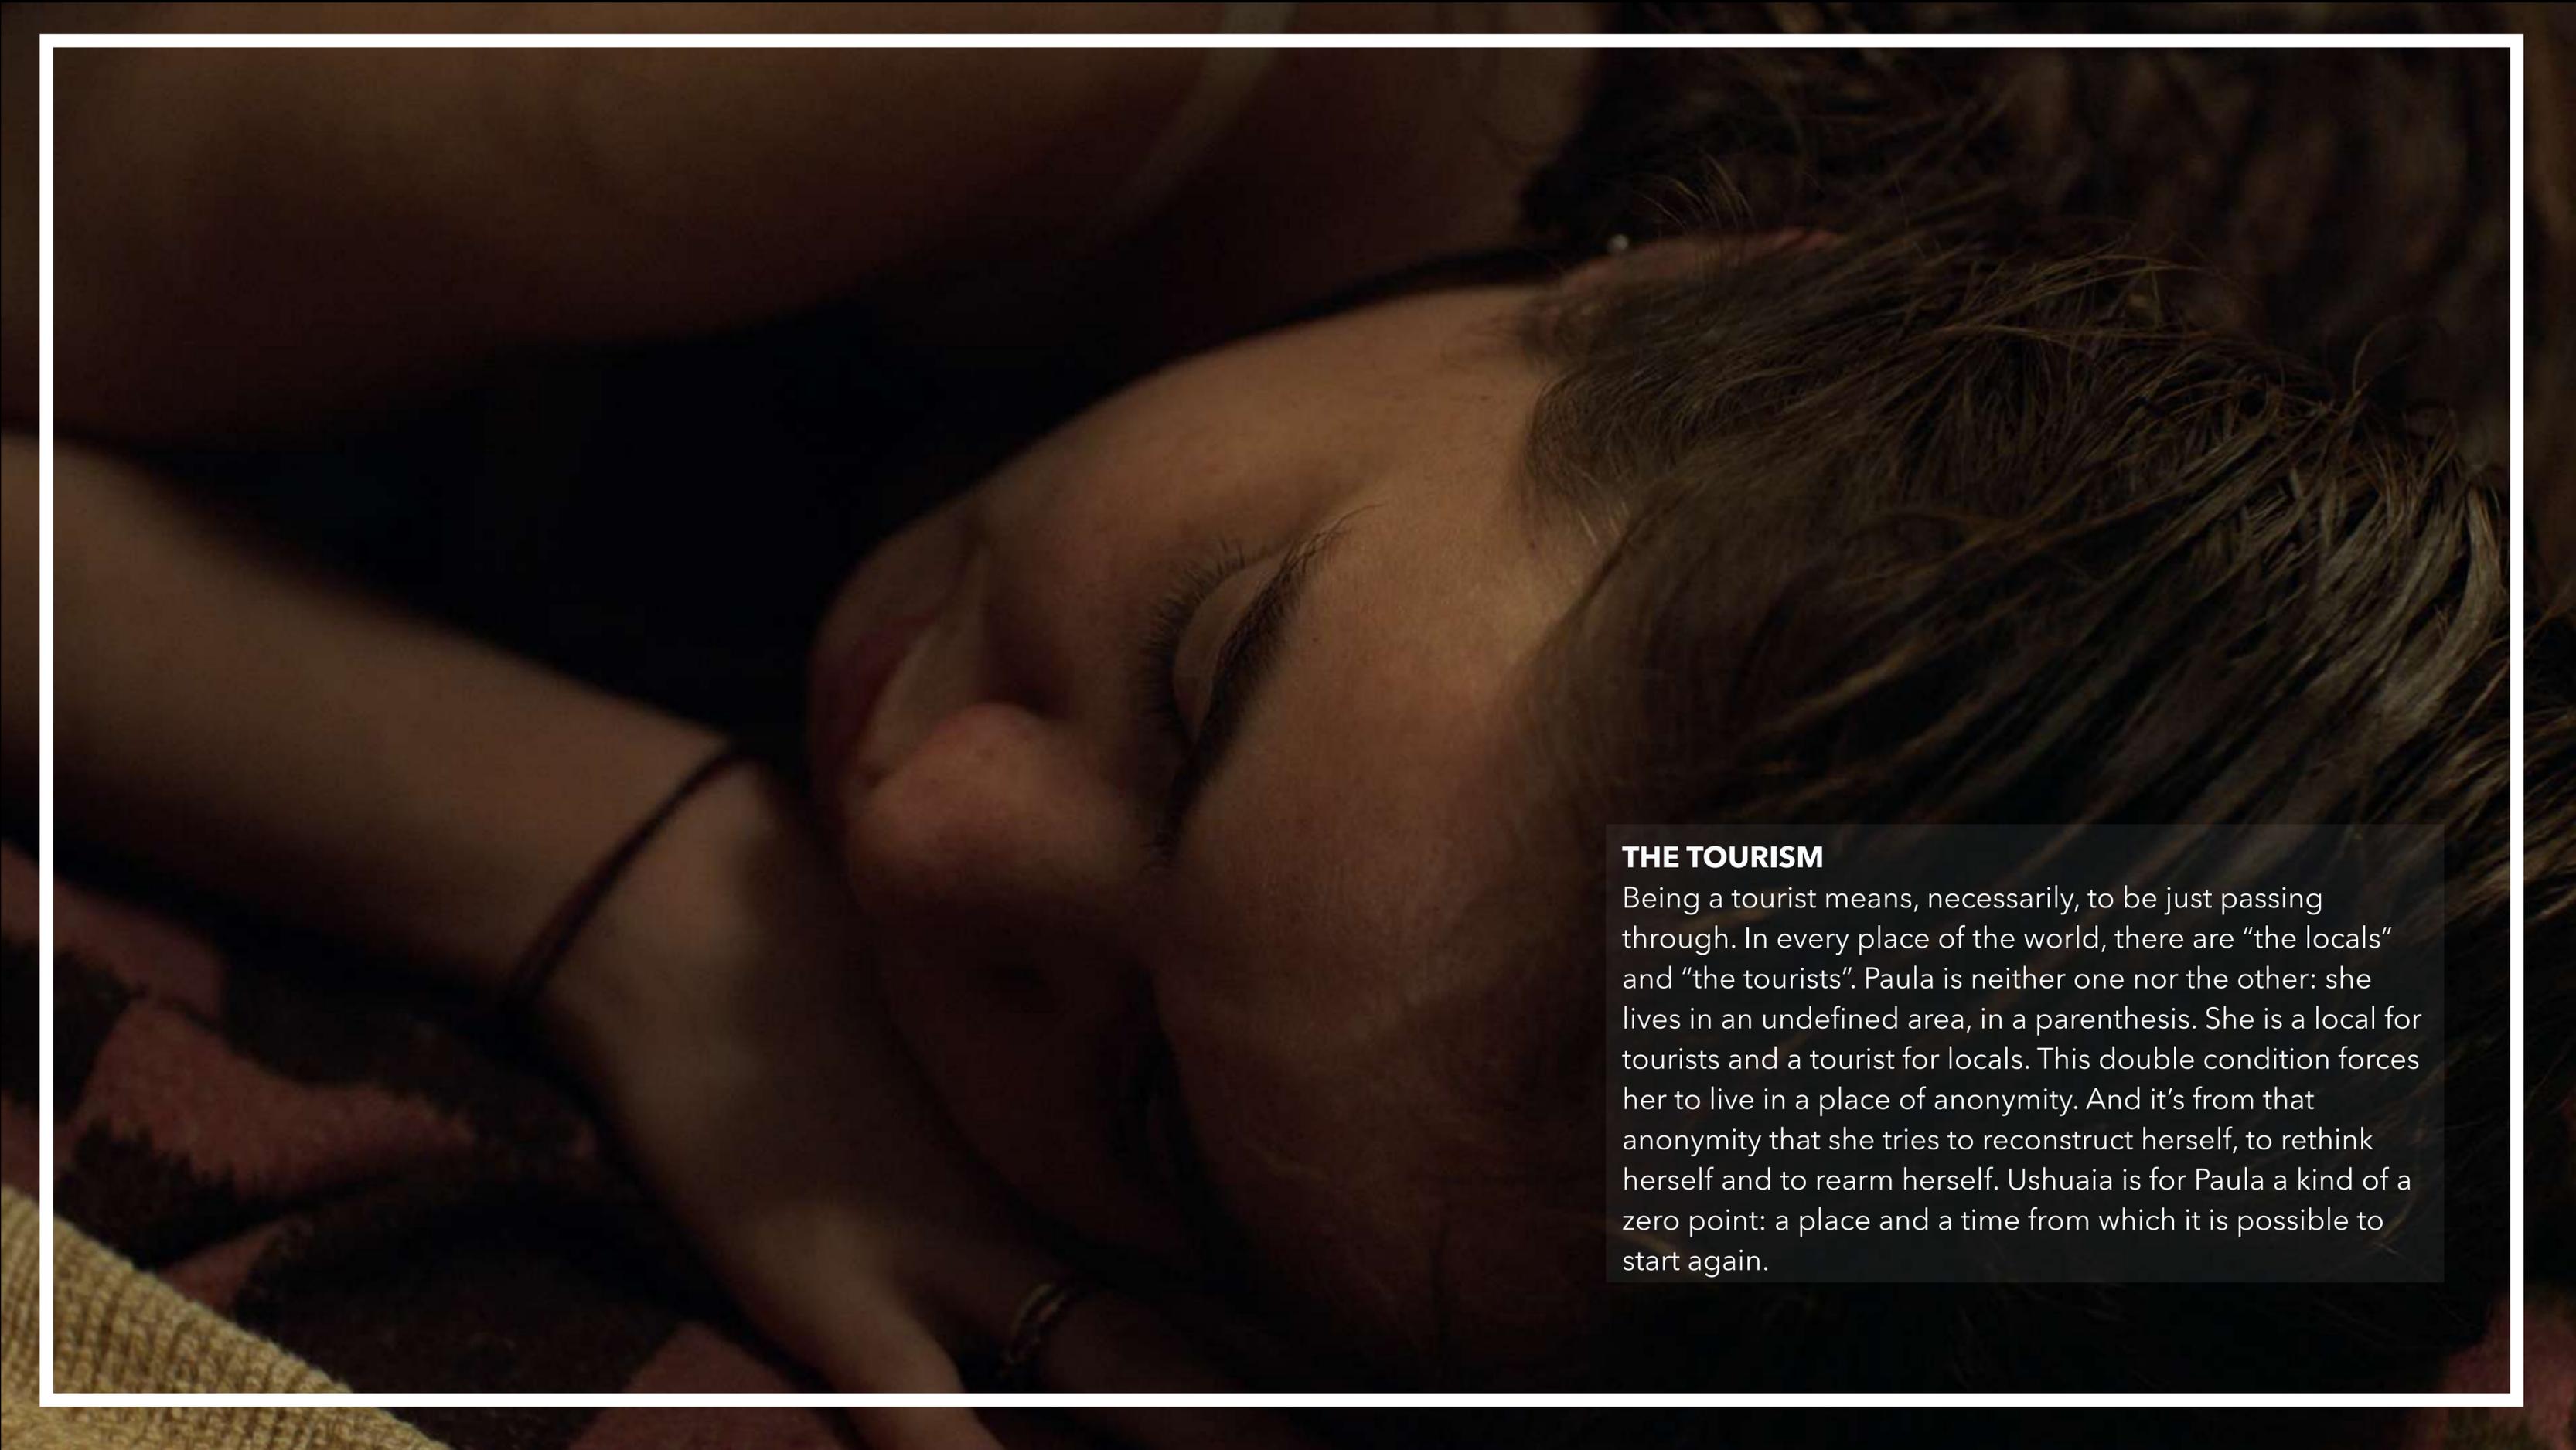

"The Omission" takes place in Ushuaia, the southernmost city of the American continent. The city lies on an island and lives on tourism and industrial activity. From all corners of the country people come looking for shelter and this makes Ushuaia a place of waiting and transit. But "transit" to where? After spending a long time there, I realized that Ushuaia does not lead anywhere, or maybe it only leads to itself. To put it briefly, Ushuaia is a mystery with a strong magnetic power, and it's from that mystery that the film is made.

PAULA

In this city of transit to nowhere, Paula always lives alone, halfway between her sister, daughter and boyfriend. She is always "between" things, always moving, always without a fixed point. That's the reason why all the situations that involve her emotionally take place in anonymous spaces: on routes, at service stations, in cars, in hotel rooms. Even her job is to move people from one place to another. In that endless drift, Paula feels comfortable. She could continue her life like that, but there's a moment when she is forced to decide, to act, to resolve. At that moment, the different parts of the film come together and end up returning the image of a broken mirror. At the end, everything is omitted, but everything is there.

THE TOURISM

Being a tourist means, necessarily, to be just passing through. In every place of the world, there are "the locals" and "the tourists". Paula is neither one nor the other: she lives in an undefined area, in a parenthesis. She is a local for tourists and a tourist for locals. This double condition forces her to live in a place of anonymity. And it's from that anonymity that she tries to reconstruct herself, to rethink herself and to rearm herself. Ushuaia is for Paula a kind of a zero point: a place and a time from which it is possible to start again.

THE MONEY

In Paula's world everything has a value. Even the affections have a value. The common denominator of this value is money, which is present in the film not only in labour relations but also in personal ones. The materiality and the flow of bills are the unity and the measure of change of Paula's relationships: with the tourists, with her sister, with her boyfriend, with her friend, with the young man she falls in love with, with herself. Money is everywhere in Paula's life.
